I have two functions that I use a lot, and I'd like to avoid making them into global variables, but instead call them in the other functions. function constructItem(){ new Item(this, 'error', 999); new Item(this, 'item', undefined); ... } function destroyItem(item) { item.destroy(); } constructItem(); constructItem(); constructItem(); ... The destructItem doesn't even have to be in the same function, just in the same part of the script. I want to avoid making them global variables, but I also don't want to make them functions. Can anyone help me here? A: You can create a prototype to your Item class, which contains methods, and add the constructItem() method to it. function Item() { this.constructItem(); } 1cdb36666d

Download Now Genuine keys: Operating system: Windows, Linux, macOS.Q: Add new Customer attribute "billing_preference" to WC_Product_Variable I want to add a new Customer attribute in Woocommerce, i can add the attribute and it shows up in the Attribute Edit Screen in Settings. What i want to achieve is adding a new customer attribute/customer value inside of WC_Product_Variable. For example the attribute is "customer_profile" and it has multiple customer value inside of it. So i added the customer attribute to the attribute edit screen, but i want that customer value to be added inside of WC_Product_Variable object. This is my code to add the new attribute to the attribute edit page: add_filter('woocommerce_product_data_attributes', 'custom_product_data_attributes', 20); function custom_product_data_attributes($product_data_atts) { $product_data_atts['customer_profile'] = ['label' => 'Nieuw profiel', 'input' => 'text', 'class' => '',]; return $product_data_atts; } So i searched for a way to add this new attribute to the WC_Product_Variable object, i found this code: // Adding customer attribute add_filter('woocommerce_product_attributes', 'custom_product_attributes', 20); function custom_product_attributes($product_attributes) { $product_attributes['customer_profile']
